They had the tip that Alexandria, Va., and not the Union station was the destination, and they took another route, arriving just about the time of the President's car. One machine with newspaper men caught up with the President's car after it crossed Long bridge, but it was turned back. Motor cycle policemen had been stationed on one of the roads to hold up any but the official machines. However, when the party arrived at Alexandria there was about 100 persons present.
